

PACIFIC STUDIES

A TRANSFORMATIONAL MOVEMENT

While the horrors of inequity and injustice under colonialism and neocolonialism have been made grossly apparent in recent years, we are also reminded of the many social justice movements that have sought and won our liberation. In Oceania, these transformational movements have been demanding decolonization for decades, and have also shaped the academic field we now know as Pacific Studies. This year's conference engages, critically examines, and celebrates social justice movements and organizing, as well as all the ways our work within and beyond the academy has been transformational in the Pacific. We invite submissions that explore this theme in any way, but are especially interested in those that speak to the following topics:

- Social justice movements in Oceania
- Decolonization, demilitarization, and sovereignty
- Transformational Pacific leadership
- Transboundary relations and Oceanic solidarities
- Indigenous resistance and resilience
- Activism within and beyond the disciplines

CALL FOR PRESENTATIONS

DEADLINE:
15 March 2022

Students of all disciplines and at all degree levels are encouraged to submit proposals for a range of presentation formats from research paper presentations to creative/performative presentations or panels. Proposals should include a presentation title, a 250-word abstract, and a short biography of the author. Submissions are due on 15 March 2022 at 10pm (Hawai'i Standard Time).

Submit to:
<http://go.hawaii.edu/nuV>

This year's CPIS Student Conference will be held entirely online on 11 April 2022.

For more information, contact:
cpiscon@hawaii.edu

CENTER FOR PACIFIC ISLANDS STUDIES
UNIVERSITY OF HAWAII' I AT MĀNOA

FOR DISABILITY ACCESS, PLEASE CONTACT CPIS@HAWAII.EDU. THE UNIVERSITY OF HAWAII' I IS AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/AFFIRMATIVE ACTION INSTITUTION.